to Little Billee, and a handsome Tillyb she was even in her old uniform coat and big slippers.

Steedfast next appeared behind the curtains and that was before the rearing of the great black beard. He looked full of possibilities, however, and not overlean, which was as the character should have been. The waits between scenes were long, but there was good music to break them. An effort was made to reproduce, in so

As far as was possible, in all pictures, the settings of Mr. Du Maurier's pictures, Little Bitute was captured and posed when he was out on a lark with Zouzo Butler and Dador Abbott. Little Bitute was a very popular and rowdy ones at that. Little Bitute looked as hardy on that Sunday afternoon when his military friends were out on a lark with him. This respectfully brought up young Briton through the crowded boulevards, and Zouzo Butler roared and roared, repeated over and over his English phrase, "Good old England!" Little Bitute took the part, and his expression was full of the gleam that comes after an abstinence from smoking. He was smoking a large Egyptian cigarette and showed to the audience only the profile of Dador as he looked at his friend. The girls in the crowd were brilliant, and the spectators applauded.

Notwithstanding the limitations of the stage, the music was so good that it was so successfully reproduced, and the Bohemian character of the place was indicated by some rather effective lighting. The scene opened with Trilby and Alfred looking into Trilby's "twin gray stars"; Sergio, with his board rearranged, was the other; Alfred and Trilby sang, "The old song," and Trilby and Tuffy and Leonor and Zoussa, and the others, sang, "The new song." The scene of this studio in Paris long ago. The posing was good and the effect was excellent, so much so that the spectators were disappointed again and got it.

And there was the scene between Sergio and Trilby with Alfred in the background. Trilby represented Sergio, kneeling before Trilby after he had told her that she was his goddess and his life. Trilby was in the background, her hands outstretched. "Et maintenant dors, ma chérie," and Trilby became not the Trilby singing in the old or the new, but the Trilby of the past, and too funny for laughter, but the Leonor of the past.

Again Trilby appeared, and this time Trilby Belle was pleading with her to answer his love song, and Trilby sang, "The old song," played some "Egyptian Folk Songs" on a violin solo.

And then Leonor, Moore, H. Caswell, and Sergio sang with spirit:

Malheureux s'en va t'en guerre,
Malheureux, si nous n'avons l'argent.

And then came another song of Trilby as she leaned forward to sing this song of high note, and the audience was so good that the audience laughed and then, gaining strength, it figure appears clad in what seems to be a classical dress of some kind, and she wears a crown or tiara on her bare, a gold coronet of stars is on her head, and as she stands, her hands hanging down, she looks down at the ground with a slight inclination of her head and body toward the imperial box. It is the pauper Truth, the poor, the lowly, the despised, the despised, or more people, mostly women, came out from the big room, and the crowd of people, and went home to think it over. Poor Truth!

THE UNITED PRESS WINS.

Failure of the New Orleans Suit by the Times-Democrat.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 9.—The injunction proceedings instituted by the Times-Democrat in the effort to prevent the Southern Association Press from furnishing news received through the Times-Democrat to the Daily State newspaper of this city was decided by Judge Parlange of the United States Circuit Court to-day in favor of the Southern Association Press.

The Court denied the injunction on the ground that the Times-Democrat failed to furnish to the Daily State on its case as contained in the bill. The principal reason for refusing to grant the injunction was that the Times-Democrat had failed apparently to make the contract with which it claimed to have the right to the exclusive news.

To Reform the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen

ALBANY, Feb. 9.—Senator Bradley of Brooklyn has prepared a bill which he will introduce next week to provide for the election of Aldermen in Brooklyn by Assembly districts, instead of by Senate districts as at present. The President of the Board of Aldermen is to be elected by the people instead of by the Senate. Senator Bradley says that the present method of electing Aldermen, and the President of the Board, is "unrepresentative and unbusinesslike," and that under the system now in vogue the residents of a ward in many instances do not elect the Aldermen whom they desire. Under the new plan, he thinks the election of Aldermen by Assembly districts will also have a strong influence on the election of the President of the Board.

The present case grows out of the failure of A. H. King & Co., the clothiers. Some time ago Augusta Goldstein and Annie Corn, who held mortgages on the stock, took it to Wilmerding Morris & Mitchell, and advertised it for sale at auction. The H. B. Cladin Company had a claim for $2,000 against the firm, and Mr. Goldsmith had the property seized under execution and stopped the sale. At that time he was under the law required to file a bond of indemnity for only $4,000, being twice the amount of the claim, but the Sheriff required a bond of $10,000, and Mr. Goldsmith, being in a hurry to have the seizure made, gave the bond required, the sureties being the Cladin company and the American Surety Company.

A Sheriff's jury was then impanelled to try

Mr. Goldsmith pointed out to Chief Judge Herlihy that the delay would be to the detriment of the plaintiffs, as the best prices could not be gotten now the goods being reasonable. He pointed out that the goods were sold at less than their appraised value, and that the Sheriff's jury had twice tried title to the property. Mr. Maclean, for the Sheriff, for the first time asked for a new bond for every claim filed, so as to take all responsibility from the Sheriff.

"Do you mean to say," said the Court, "that if I find the status filed you would ask for a bond in each case?"

Mr. Maclean had no answer to this query, and Mr. Goldsmith said that without it he would not file his claims. The court ruled that on each claim was pursued, the sale of the goods could, if there was a long list of claims, be put off indefinitely.

Mr. Goldsmith went to the Sheriff's office to file the indemnity bond for $10,000, the sureties Philharmonic Concert at Carnegie Hall.

The programme of the Philharmonic Concert at Carnegie Hall last night left nothing to be desired, so far as its execution was concerned, and the greater number of the selections from which it was made up pleased as much in themselves as they did through the admirable manner in which they were interpreted. Brahms's symphony in E minor was the opening number of the concert, and those of the audience that are interested by the music of this composer were enabled to enjoy the double satisfaction which it must afford them when so ably performed as Mr. Seidl and his orchestra are certain to render it. Those who found it

Mme. Nordica sang Elton's "Dream" from "Lohengrin," and her share in the Wagner selections was almost entitled to rank with her own. Her singing of the "Aria" which she sang as great a commendation as any singer might expect. She sang, besides the aria from Handel's "Semele," the "Bright Seraphim," "Plus Grand dans Son Obscurité," with the successful results that her lovely voice and artistic methods are certain to secure in music so suited to her capabilities. Her singing of the "Aria" from her earlier career, the "Bright Seraphim," and the "Aria" from the symphonic poem "Les Preludes," and its performance was as admirable as that of the number which preceded it.

The Shepherdites, it is understood, will insist on continuing their independent organization, giving assurance at the same time that while the next campaign comes around they will unite with the regulars in making the nominations and in the support of the regular candidates. It is said, however, that Mr. Sheperd, himself, would not be averse to the organization of a single committee in which his followers would be included. But most of his lieutenants are opposed to the scheme and contend that two organizations working in unity in election day could not possibly be more effective than if they were under the control of a single machine.

The regulars will probably elect their officers

The Order of the Vasa was established by King Gustaf III. of Sweden on May 18, 1749, in honor of Gustaf Vasa, who reigned from 1523 to 1593, and who introduced Christianity into Sweden. It was created for distinguished Swedish citizens. It is one of the most highly prized of the Swedish orders, and there are only two others besides Mr. Lundgren in this country who have received the decoration. The insignia is an eight-pointed double white enamelled star, pendant from a ribbon with gold and blue stripes. It is in enamel in the centre. Between the points of the star are gold crosses in resonance.

WOULDN'T BURY MRS. PALME.
The Mission Baptists Backed Out When They Heard that She Was a Catholic.
Mrs. Annie Palme, the Irish wife of Vito Palme, an Italian laborer, died at her home, 75 Catherine street, at 7 o'clock on Thursday night.
The body has remained unburied since, the husband being too poor to defray the expenses of a funeral. An undertaker who had agreed to bury the remains backed out because the

According to the story told by the neighbors last night, it appears that the women connected with the Baptist mission learned on Friday morning that Mrs. Palmie had a Catholic priest with her before she died, and they refused to bury any kind of more than $400. The funeral was arranged. Mrs. Ruppel, it is said, notified the undertaker that she would not be responsible.

The undertaker told the husband of the dead woman that he would bury her if he got $15. The money spent all day Friday trying to raise the money was all for nothing. The husband of the dead woman, who is in the Vermont, and the boy appealed to his commander, who, it is said, made out a check for $10 to give to the lad to help

Col. Samuel Pekausky took a cante ride the other evening to visit the city's "bracing air," for if there is such a thing Col. Pekausky enjoys it is cool, bracing air. A sudden lurch of the car dislocated his carefully brushed tile, and it fell in the street. With some excitement, but not forgetting his dignity, Col. Pekausky called to the conductor:

"Here, my man, stop this car."

The graph stopped the car, but not until it had gone half a block beyond the scene of the accident. There is one thing that Col. Pekausky will not do, and that is walk. He would not even walk after his hat, but arising with the Charge of Receiving Money.

STONY CREEK, Conn., Feb. 9.—The citizens of this village are concerned over the removal of

At about a year ago some of Howd's friends, including Landlord Creme of the hotel, suggested that he be appointed Postmaster of Stony Creek. At first he declined to have anything to do with the matter, but, after consulting with his sons, decided that he would take the place and put his son Edward Howd in the office to do the work. Mr. Howd tells of what followed in this way:

lections came from L. F. and Mr. Howard, as usual, took an active part in the proceedings. Mr. E. B. Hibbard for Selectman and succeeded in defeating him. Here it is that all people who discuss the case do not agree, and the officers of the court are not agreed. The People's Party through the efforts of Mr. Hibbard and others say that his intemperate habit was the cause.

He went to Washington asking for an investigation of the Stony Creek office. An inspector came on from Washington, and the day he arrived Mr. Howard was employed at the hotel. He was in the kitchen, and was in the use of a yoke of oxen. There was quite a party hanging around the hotel barroom, in Frederick Kleas, 77 years old, of 77 Troutman street, Williamsburgh, died in Joseph Memlie's barber shop at 191 Troutman street yesterday afternoon while waiting to be shaved. He was in a happy frame of mind when he entered the place, and talked with Memlie, who was combing the hair of another customer. When Memlie called "Next!" to Kleas the latter didn't answer, and the barber discovered that he was dead. Heart disease was the cause of death.

The bill carries appropriations for the various State departments and State institutions for the next fiscal year aggregating $9,671,860, an increase of $54,000 over the amount appropriated by last year's bill. An increased appropriation is granted for the next Legislature, made necessary by an increase in the number of its members, of $70,000, making the total $470,000, and for the State Normal school, for the same purpose, $100,000, while in service, of $300,000, making the total $430,000.
